The only contribution to the submarine and armed ship issue made by the State Department since the German peace note of Dec. 12 has been an informal interpretation of the original armed ship memorandum of March 25, 1916, to the effect that the United States has as yet laid down no policy which would prevent the arming of ships fore as well as aft. Each case must be settled entirely on its own merits as to armament, cargo, passenger list, nature of voyage and general intentions.

As a rule, an otherwise regular passenger or freight steamer on its accustomed route is to be assumed to be merely defensively armed, regardless of the exact nature of her armament. The burden of proof is placed with the submarine commander. by the State Department since the
